TREMENDOUS
hearts

make an extraordinary difference.

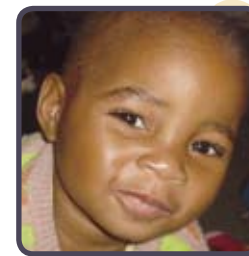

The children of South Africa are in crisis. The HIV/AIDS epidemic, poverty and a slow response by leaders have combined to put an entire generation at an intolerable risk. Experts predict that by 2015, one in three South African children will be orphaned and millions more will be made vulnerable by abuse and neglect. South Africa is not equipped to handle this crisis alone. These children need our immediate help to create a healthy future.

CAPABLE hands to build capacity.

Tremendous Hearts' mission is to provide highly-skilled volunteers who commit to a year or more of service to South African children's homes and other agencies that care for orphans and vulnerable children. Our aim is to improve the standard of care in children's homes and to increase the number of children who are able to transition out of residential care. We provide eligible volunteers with scholarships so that all who want to serve are able to volunteer regardless of their financial circumstances.

South Africa has the most AIDS infections of any country in the world at nearly 6 million. Nearly 1,000 South Africans die every day of HIV/AIDS and 28% of pregnant women are HIV positive. Although South Africa is the most industrialized nation on the continent, poverty is still great. Sixty-eight percent of South African children live in poverty. In 2007, there were 2.5 million orphan-children in South Africa. That number is expected to grow to 5.7 million by 2015. This will mean that one in three South African children will be orphaned. In addition, with poverty as a profound stressor on families, there is a high incidence of alcohol and drug abuse, and physical and sexual abuse. Millions of children have been removed from kinship care and placed in residential care to secure their safety.

The good news is that there are many dedicated South Africans and local agencies doing excellent work in response to this crisis but they are overwhelmed. More resources are needed to ensure that vulnerable children receive proper care and have a future. We hope you will join us in supporting these hard working and compassionate people on the front line of this unprecedented humanitarian crisis that is unfolding one family and one child at a time.
